Continuing Care Retirement Communities (CCRCs) are the high-end, full-service senior living communities. Also called Life Plan Communities, they offer insight even for age-at-home seniors. We examine the options from the consumer viewpoint.

Whole-person wellness should be everyone's goal. What is it? How is it defined? What are examples of best practices wellness programs? We began this spring asking these questions. Through a series of interviews we share our findings. (Click on the photos or blue text to read the associated articles.) Residents and staff at Judson Park, a Seattle-area CCRC, share their experiences. Cee Cee Hodgson, a nationally recognized senior housing architect offers her insight. And Masterpiece Living gave us time with Teresa Beshwate, one of their in-house experts. Come back next month for more from our interview with Teresa. Masterpiece Living operationalizes the "Live Long, Die Short" strategy of co-founder Dr. Roger Landry.

6 Whole-Person Wellness Dimensions

Wellness is one of those white hot buzzwords that everyone uses, knowing it's good in theory, but for which there's a wide gap in common understanding and practices, even among experts. We decided to look more closely at wellness and the six wellness dimensions from the viewpoint of seniors considering housing options and their caregiving family members — READ MORE HERE
